COLLECTION OF DEBTS

Drago Doctrine as to the Use of Force.

MAY COME UP AT HAGUE

Resolution Adopted by Rio Janeiro Conference.

THIS COUNTRY'S ATTITUDE

In Favor of First Resorting to a Public
Tribunal for the Determination of a Claim.

BY WILLIAM K. CURTIS.
Written for The Star and the Chicago Record-Herald.

We have heard a good deal about the Drago doctrine lately, and are likely to hear more in the future, because it is to be discussed at the approaching conference at The Hague, where the delegates from the United States are to offer it as a topic for discussion. It will therefore be interesting to know who Drago is and what is his doctrine.

Luis M. Drago is a brilliant young lawyer of the Argentine Republic who was minister of foreign affairs in that country in 1902, at the time when Great Britain, Germany and Italy attempted to collect certain claims from their citizens by forcible means from the government of Venezuela. On December 29 of that year Senor Drago sent a note to Mr. Garcia Merou, Argentine minister at Washington, which attracted a great deal of attention when it was published, shortly after. Copies of this note were sent to all the American republics and to the European powers. Although the principles enunciated were not new and had been discussed for a century or more, they were so forcibly and so concisely expressed that they have since been alluded to as "the Drago doctrine," in distinction from "the Calvo doctrine," which is very much broader.

Senor Calvo was also an Argentine jurist, who died at an advanced age about two years ago. He was Argentine minister to Germany, France and other countries; he was a voluminous writer upon international law, and his commentaries, which fill several volumes, have been translated into several languages and are regarded as high authority among civilized nations. Senor Calvo takes the broad ground that no government has the right to use force to compel the payment of financial obligations. He condenses his theories in the following paragraph:

"According to strict international right, the recovery of debts and the pursuit of private claims do not justify the use of the armed intervention of governments; and, since European states invariably follow this theory, it is not justifiable to use force in reason why they should not also impose it upon themselves in their relations with nations of the new world."

The Drago doctrine is not so broad, and forbids the use of force to collect debts resulting from contracts, concessions, loans, etc. He argues that the capitalist who loans money to a government always takes into account the resources of a country, the security offered and its ability to pay. He goes into the business with his eyes open; he charges a heavy premium for the risks he assumes, and therefore he has no right to complain or to appeal to force in case the debtor is unable to pay or refuses to do so.

Alexander Hamilton's View.

In support of his contention, Senor Drago quotes Alexander Hamilton, as follows: "Contract is a bond between a nation and private individuals are obligatory, according to the conscience of the sovereign, and may not be the object of compelling force." He also appeals to the eleventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "the judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another state, or by citizens or by subjects of any foreign state."

Senor Drago admitted that the payment of its public debts, the amount of which may be determined by the tribunals of the country involved, or by international arbitration, is absolutely binding upon a nation, but maintained that the debtor nation has a right to choose the manner and the time of payment, and that no national credit and national honor is involved.

There has been considerable discussion as to the exact attitude of Alexander Hamilton on this subject. His utterances were directed to an obnoxious proposition which was offered as a part of the Constitution of the United States at the time that document was being framed. It provided that the judicial power should extend to all controversies between a state and citizens of another state and between citizens of different states, and to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.

"It has been suggested that an assignment of the public securities of one state to the citizens of another would enable them to prosecute that state in the federal courts for the amount of those securities; a suggestion which the following considerations prove to be without foundation:

"It is inherent in the nature of sovereignty to be amenable to the suit of an individual without his consent. This is the general sense and the general practice of mankind; and the exemption, as one of the attributes of sovereignty, is now enjoyed by the government of every state in the Union. Unless, therefore, there is a surrender of this immunity in the plan of the convention, it will remain with the states, and the danger intimated must be merely ideal. The circumstances which are necessary to produce an alienation of state sovereignty were discussed in considering the article of taxation, and need not be repeated here. A recurrence to the principles there established will satisfy us that there is no color to pretend that the state governments would, by the adoption of that plan, be divested of the privilege of paying their own debts in their own way, free from every constraint but that which flows from the obligations of good faith. The contracts between a nation and individuals are only binding on the conscience of the sovereign, and have no pretension to a compulsive force. They confer no right of action independent of the sovereign will. To what purpose would it be to authorize suits against states for the debts they owe? How could recoveries be enforced? It is evident that it could not be done without waging war against the contracting state; and to ascribe to the federal courts by mere implication, and in destruction of a pre-existing right of the state governments, a power which would involve such a consequence, would be altogether forced and unwarrantable."

The President's Attitude.
In a memorandum sent to Minister Merou in reply to his communication, Secretary Hay did not assent directly to the doctrine set forth by Senor Drago, but quoted from recent messages by President Roosevelt to Congress to the effect that "by the Monroe doctrine we do not guarantee any state against punishment if it misconducts itself, provided that punishment does not take the form of the acquisition of territory by a non-American state." Mr. Hay also quoted from another message in which President Roosevelt said: "No independent nation in America may have the slightest fear of aggression from the United States. It behooves each one to maintain order within its own boundaries, and to discharge its just obligations to foreigners. When this is done they can rest assured that, be they strong or weak, they have nothing to dread from outside interference."

In his message of December 5, 1905, President Roosevelt again took strong grounds in support of the Drago doctrine. After calling attention to the embarrassment that might be caused to our government if foreign nations undertook to recover their loans from the other American republics by force, and to the danger that such methods would result in permanent occupation of American territory by European powers, he said: "Our own government has always refused to enforce such contractual obligations on behalf of its citizens by an appeal to arms. It is much to be wished that all foreign governments would take the same view."

As the American republics are all borrowers, they are naturally inclined to take the same view of the case, and among the subjects for discussion at the recent American conference at Rio de Janeiro was a resolution requesting the peace conference at The Hague "to consider whether, and if at all to what extent, the use of force for the collection of public debts is admissible." Certain long-headed, far-sighted men in the Latin-American republics who have given much thought to this subject were doubtful as to the expediency of pressing it at The Hague conference lest the European bankers who supply the money for public improvements and the development of their resources might become alarmed and refuse to furnish any more funds. At their suggestion the proposition was modified and a resolution was unanimously adopted at the Rio conference on August 22, 1906, requesting the second peace conference at The Hague "to examine the question of compulsory collection of public debts, and in general the best means tending to diminish among nations conflicts of purely pecuniary origin."

This was not an endorsement of the Drago doctrine and was not intended to be. The object of the resolution was to get the subject before The Hague conference in some way or other for discussion so as to draw out the policy of the lending nations and with the hope of ultimately securing a declaration from them against the use of force to recover their loans. At the same time the government of the United States and other American nations objected to any declaration that might be construed as an encouragement or sympathy to defaulting governments, and their only desire of intervention is to protect such governments from injustice and unnecessary injury.

It has not been decided who will present the subject at The Hague, the United States or one of the other American republics. That is left for future decision after consultation among the plenipotentiaries at The Hague. Perhaps Brazil, who furnished the presiding officer for the conference, would be the most appropriate, but it makes very little difference because the proposition comes from an assembly of nations and is the unanimous action of all the American republics.

How This Country Stands.

The instructions from the different American governments to their delegates at The Hague concerning this subject have not been disclosed. The attitude of the United States, however, may be described as follows:

"That when pecuniary claims are held by citizens of a creditor state against a foreign government it would seem advisable to ascertain the question of liability and the amount due by resorting to a public tribunal in which the rights of the respective parties can be impartially determined and the law applied as in ordinary judicial proceedings. This would avoid the use of force until the equities are determined. Then if the debtor nation refused to meet its obligations the question is open whether force may be used without injustice. Should a debtor nation refuse to submit the facts and the law to an impartial tribunal or to arbitration the use of force might be justified to compel it to do so, and, in the meantime, the creditor nation would be justified in demanding security for the payment of a possible award."

ROCKVILLE AND VICINITY.

General and Personal News of Montgomery County, Md.

Special Correspondence of The Star.

ROCKVILLE, Md., May 21, 1907.

Arthur Offutt, a young colored resident of this place, was arrested last night on a charge of attempted arson. It is alleged that Saturday night he attempted to burn the house occupied by him and his family by saturating the lower floor with coal oil and setting fire to the curtains. When discovered and extinguished before much damage had been done. The house belongs to Mrs. Helen Howard.

A reunion was held Saturday at the home of Dr. E. B. Prettyman, at this place, when nearly all who formed the faculty of the National Medical College, which was founded by Dr. Prettyman, were present. Dr. Prettyman was principal of the institution spent the day at the Prettyman home. Miss Richmond, McLean, Davis, Ricker, Scarborough, Upshur, Henry and Hoppen and Prof. and Mrs. Austin were among those present.

If Walter Loveless, the alleged proprietor of a hotel on the Conduit road, fails to give himself up to Sheriff James P. Gott before the expiration of the term of his O'Brien of Glen Echo, it is stated he will have to pay $400 to the county. Loveless is under indictment for violations of the local option law of the city of Washington. He was released on bail in the sum of $400, O'Brien qualifying as surety. His counsel, Mr. J. W. R. Ricker, tried at the last term of court, but when called for trial Loveless was not on hand, and his recognisance was declared forfeited.

Charles P. Collins and James A. Moran were last evening reappointed town marshals and town constables, respectively, of Glen Echo. Thomas A. Weaver and Guy E. Jenkins, who were recently re-elected members of the council, subscribed to the oath of office before the mayor and entered on their two-year term.

The Halpine Hunt Club last Saturday evening indulged in a fox chase, those participating being George Gates, Clay B. Edwards, Charles Windham, Charles A. Clagett, Dr. Barrett, William Edward Butler, and William R. Williams.

FIGHT ROOSEVELT IN SOUTH.

Georgia League Will Oppose Office-holders as Delegates.

ATLANTA, May 21.—The federal office-holders in Georgia have been elected to the next republican national convention, the Republican State League of Georgia has its way. The organization has been formed to fight the Roosevelt administration.

An address has been issued by Chairman Blodgett of the state league, which says, in part: "There is no doubt that all the federal office-holders will expose the cause of Roosevelt or ignominiously submit to his dictation. This dictation by the President is wrong and has a tendency to degrade every honest man who is allied with it."

"The recent visit of Assistant Postmaster General Hitchcock to South Carolina, Georgia and Florida, and the selection by the President of ex-Senator Marion Butler of North Carolina to round up the delegates from the southern states engenders discord and leaves the impression that offices are to be traded for delegates, that delegates are to be tagged."

"Let us make this a fight to the knife, and the knife to the hilt, to see that no federal officer shall be elected as a delegate from this southern section."

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER.

BY RANDALL PARRISH.

AUTHOR OF "WHEN WILDERNESS WAS KING."

(Copyright, 1907, by A. C. McClurg & Co.)

CHAPTER XV.

The Door Closes.

Totally exhausted, the two men dropped their heavy burden on the earth. Mason swore as the blood began dripping again from his wound, which had been torn open afresh in his efforts to bear Hampton to safety. Just below them a mounted trooper caught sight of them and came forward.

He failed to recognize his officer in the begrimed person before him, until called to attention by the voice of command. "Sim, if there is any water in your canteen hand it over. Good; here, marshal, use this. Now, Sim, note what I say carefully, and don't waste a minute. Tell the first sergeant to send a file of men up here with some sort of litter on the run. Then you ride to the Herndon House—the yellow house where the roads fork, you remember—and tell Miss Naida Gilles (don't forget the name) that Mr. Hampton has been seriously wounded, and we are taking him to the hotel. Can you remember that?"

"Then off with you, and don't spare the horse."

He was gone instantly, and Brant began bailing the pallid, upturned face. "You'd better lie down, marshal," he commanded. "You're pretty weak from loss of blood, and I can do all there is to be done until those fellows get here."

In fifteen minutes they appeared, and five minutes later they were telling slowly down the valley. Brant was walking beside his still unconscious rival. Squads of troopers were scattered along the base of the hill, and the affair, and curving the watchful, alert guard. As these caught sight of the little party approaching, there were shouts of derision, which swelled into triumph when they perceived Hampton's apparently lifeless form, and Mason leaning in weakness on the arm of a trooper. The sight and sound angered Brant.

"Carry Hampton to his room and summon medical attendance at once," he ordered. "I have a word to say to those fellows." Seeing Mr. Wynkoop on the hotel porch, Brant said to him: "Miss Spencer informed me that you saw a man leap from the back window of the Occidental. Is that true?"

"The missionary nodded.

"Good; then come along with me. I intend breaking the back of this lynching business right here and now."

He strode directly across the street to the steps of the Occidental, his clothing scarcely more than smoldering. The crowd stared at him sullenly; then suddenly a reaction came, and the American spirit of the affair, the frontier spirit of the Occidental, burst forth into a confused murmur, that became half a cheer, Brant did not mind his words.

"Now, look here, men! If you want any more trouble we're here to accommodate you. Fighting is our trade, and we don't back out. But I wish to see you right now, and straight off the handle, that you are simply making a parcel of fools of yourselves.
